

High-End 2024: Cabasse Pearl Myuki

Portable speaker you can also use in your living room at home.

By Lasse Svendsen / 18 May 2024 - 12:00 pm

(Photo: Lasse Svendsen)

Few, if any, realise that Cabasse has been making speakers since 1950. They weren't always spherical, but in recent years, the round spheres have become a kind of trademark for Cabasse. And so it is here too. The tiny Cabasse Pearl Myuki are the smallest of them all (the most expensive ones cost more than €100,000), and with a battery, they're also easy to carry around.

(Photo: Lasse Svendsen)

Woofers on the sides and midrange and tweeter on the front, like some of the larger models. They can be connected in stereo and multi-room and support Bluetooth, WiFi and network streaming.

There is of course an app for control and pairing, and the speakers are also Roon Ready.

(Photo: Lasse Svendsen)

There is no HDMI input here, but you can connect your TV audio via the optical input. There is also an analogue input, e.g. for a turntable with a built-in phono stage.

(Photo: Lasse Svendsen)

The speakers can be powered in the living room and then simply unplugged and carried out with the integrated bowling-style hand grip. They come with a carrying case that also has room for the charging cable and USB charger, which, when fully charged, will have enough battery for approximately 12 hours of music.